

Frequently Asked Questions

What is IV hydration therapy?

IV hydration therapy delivers fluids and, when clinically appropriate, selected vitamins and nutrients directly into a vein through an intravenous line. Before treatment, each patient undergoes an individualized assessment to determine whether IV therapy is appropriate.

Who is a candidate for IV hydration?

Adults may be considered for IV hydration after a medical evaluation. Eligibility depends on your health history, current symptoms, medications, allergies, and other clinical factors.

Do I need an appointment?

Yes. Appointments are recommended so we can allow adequate time for your medical evaluation, treatment, and monitoring. Same-day appointments may be available based on scheduling and clinical appropriateness.

How long does an IV hydration appointment take?

Appointment times vary depending on the treatment selected and your individual needs. Most visits include a medical evaluation, treatment, and observation period.

Are there risks associated with IV therapy?

Yes. Although IV therapy is generally well tolerated when appropriately administered, potential risks may include bruising, bleeding, infection, vein irritation, infiltration, allergic or adverse reactions, fluid-related complications, and other risks associated with the specific treatment provided. Your provider will discuss relevant risks and benefits before treatment.

Can I choose any IV treatment from the menu?

Treatment options are discussed with you, but the final treatment plan is based on a clinical evaluation. Not every treatment is appropriate for every patient.

Are the treatments FDA-approved?

IV hydration treatments may include FDA-approved medications or ingredients as well as compounded preparations, depending on the specific treatment. Compounded preparations are not FDA-approved, and compounded drugs have not been evaluated by the FDA for safety, effectiveness, or quality in the same manner as FDA-approved drugs. Treatment information will be discussed with you before administration.

Can I receive IV hydration if I have a medical condition?

It depends on your individual medical history. Certain medical conditions, medications, allergies, or other factors may make IV therapy inappropriate or require additional evaluation. Be sure to provide complete and accurate health information.

Can I receive IV therapy while pregnant or breastfeeding?

Pregnancy and breastfeeding require individualized medical consideration. Please disclose pregnancy or breastfeeding status during your medical evaluation. Treatment may be deferred or modified when clinically appropriate.

How often can I receive IV hydration?

There is no universal schedule that is appropriate for everyone. The frequency of treatment depends on your health status, treatment provided, clinical assessment, and medical judgment.
